

AALCO Journal of International Law

Volume 14: 2026

CALL FOR PAPERS

The forthcoming issue is a special commemorative volume marking the 70th anniversary of the establishment of AALCO. In this context, the Journal seeks to reflect the Organization's legacy, evolving role, and continued relevance in addressing contemporary challenges in international law, while offering forward-looking perspectives from scholars and practitioners.

The AALCO Journal of International Law welcomes submissions addressing important and timely issues of international law, encompassing both public and private international law. Contributions may examine doctrinal, theoretical, policy-oriented, or practice-based dimensions of international law, including emerging challenges and current developments at the global, regional, or comparative levels.

Submissions are open to contributors of all nationalities. The Journal welcomes articles from academicians, scholars, legal practitioners, government experts, officials of international organizations, and other qualified experts with a demonstrated interest and expertise in international law.
